WHAT IS IT?

Personality Dimensions is a human relations tool based on leading-edge research, which helps to explain what motivates behaviour in people with different personalities or temperaments. Participants will learn that there are 4 different personality types and with the help of various assessments they will discover which type represents them the best. This new interactive human relations and communications process/model is presented in an informative, interactive, fun and self-discovery format.

Where effective training and development is essential for meeting strategic objectives – an understanding of personality theory is a very effective tool in facilitating team creation and building; improving corporate communications; enhancing customer service and satisfaction; and in providing innovative solutions to problems by tapping into the creative energy of every temperament preference.

Everyone can benefit from this workshop, including those working in customer service, human resources, upper-management and anyone who must collaborate with colleagues. This tool will be a definite asset to the participants work and personal lives.
